Central Gwinnett High student navigates to top spot

A Central Gwinnett High School senior earned a top spot in a statewide competition spotlighting mastery in navigation and web site design. Jim Taulman competed against hundreds of Georgia students, placing third in the “Navigation” category in the “WebChallenge Design Your Future” competition.

This high school competition, sponsored by the Georgia Institute of Technology, promotes proper web designing techniques and prepares students for their future. Web sites on the Internet today are successful in large part due to the navigational setup of site designers. Through his preparation and participation in the competition, Taulman learned and successfully demonstrated the most up-to-date codes and technology needed to create a cutting-edge, user-friendly Web site.

Teacher Randi Hill is not surprised by her student’s success. She explains, “Since the first day he entered my classroom, I knew he had a natural gift when it came to understanding and applying technology. He always has excelled in Business Education classes because of his continued thirst for new knowledge.”
